

Interview of Agomoni Ganguli Mitra on pandemic related social inequalities by University of Oxford's Practical Ethics channel

Is the Coronavirus Pandemic Worse for Women?

Dr Agomoni Ganguli Mitra of the University of Edinburgh's Law School talks about how pandemics increase existing inequalities in societies, and how this may result in even more victims than those from the disease itself. She urges governments and others to take social justice considerations much more into account when preparing for, and tackling, pandemics.

This is an interview with Katrien Devolder as part of the Thinking Out Loud video series from Oxford University's Practical Ethics channel
