Resource Lists

The Resource Lists service takes some of the heavy lifting out of creating reading lists for your class(es). It is deliberately called 'Resource' (rather than 'Reading') list as it supports a variety of resources – including video resources.

Contact our local academic support librarian with your resource list (in advance of deadline) and they will create the list for you. This also alerts them to any requirements to order new / additional copies of texts, thereby better ensuring your students will have access to the resources, when they need them. The academic librarian for the School of Informatics is Angela Nicholson. You can watch a short presentation Angela made in 2020 introducing the service here.

Alternatively, you can build the resource list yourself and send to the Library for review. Once your resource list has been published by the Library, you need to share it with your students. Leganto (the resource list service provider) integrates seamlessly with Learn. You can also create a shareable link for your resource list and share via other methods – such as your course materials Drupal site, or via email.
