We are truly pleased to be able to deliver even greater comfort and safety for transposition in the form of a more astonishing Parement showcasing a secret turnkey solution that is discretely tailored to our mesmeric cravings."

Acting Chief Executive Officer with Chief Financial Officer

* sterilised needle, earthenware bowl, red bandana, lemon, orange, grapefruit, YETI® Silo® 22.7 L Water Cooler, two or more independent witnesses and knife not included.

The Lectern is replacing its elder family of robust Parements. By offering substantially less volume than their conventional counterparts, new Parements guarantee an extraordinary experience across the Lectern.

The new Parements, commissioned from an unnamed manufacturer in an unnamable location, feature as standard a pro-microbial citrus*-eggshell membrane coating, a gimmick that is specifically tailored to the Lectern's biothaumaturgical desires.

A lemon* is acquired from a knockdown retailer at an unbeatable price. The eggshell is inserted into on end of the reasonably-priced lemon. The bargain lemon is inserted into an orange*, and the orange into a grapefruit*. To save both time and money, all citrus fruits are acquired from the same deep-discounter. The grapefruit is then placed in the Parementary outershell - a YETI® Silo® 22.7 L Water Cooler* purchased off-the-shelf at a retailer chosen by two or more independent witnesses*. The Silo® is hung from the Lectern under constant observation by two or more independent witnesses.

GOING FOR IT

Both ends of the Parement's inner shell are carefully punctured with a sterilised needle* and their contents blown into an earthenware bowl*. The Leatherman takes a red bandana* from his left back pocket and, using the same sterilised needle, gently inserts it into the Parementary shell.

On arrival at its destination, under close supervision of two or more independent witnesses, the grapefruit is gently removed from the Silo® by an independent witness and carefully sliced open with a sharp knife*. Two butterflies fly out holding the red bandana and safely return it to the Leatherman's rear pocket.

The Lectern has so far taken delivery of five new Parements.

The remaining Parements on order – will join the Lectern soon.

“Craving negligible. I check again. The form is filled in. It takes me over a week to figure out what it says, but then I just give up.”

It sounded alright, and I guess I wasn't as mobile as I once was, and I needed to find new ways to make money ... so I signed up. (Are we not all teachers in some way?) Then I just forgot all about it. Meanwhile: insomnia, anxiety, tremor, and excessive sweating... Ha, gyeah! We need that burn I guess.

Then, driving home from work I catch a truck on fire and tare part of the roof off a building. Then I was confined to my apartment. I couldn't really leave. This all happened before even I knew what was going on.

By now it's an open secret that the majority of PR relating to Hard Ca$h remains locked away from the reader's view (member's only) while some pages of the press release are already out of print.

It's PAYG, so the more cash you splash, the more you comprehend. Three month leasehold member's editions of the ur-release are restricted to 56 copies, each is bioencrypted in the DNA of a dead celebrity of your choice, and probably come with their own unique denouements.

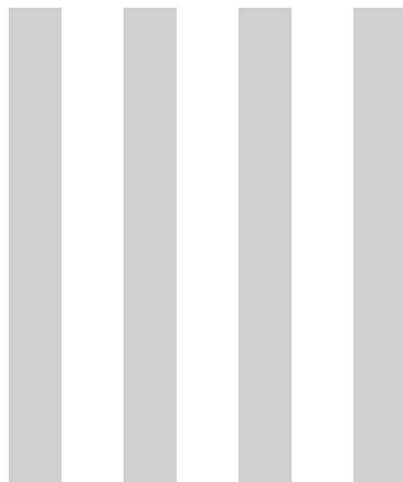

Yup, so, like I've been in several car accidents and I think - whether I was at fault or not - I was pret-ty shaky after. But crawling out of the wreckage to see someone dented my car and left without saying anything is what makes me really angry. And that is even before I consider the insurance side. That a mistake I have not made is cited as the reason f-ing BURNS, y'all!

It's weird, like, afterwards I couldn't hack it go to my PR job.. it's so funny because it, like, it reminds me of, like, what I was feeling right before I quit but, like, in a literally different environment. Like, I was in Abu Dhabi, which should have been, like, paradise you know? I'm, like, driving by the palm trees in the morning, gyeah, and I was, like, in a mental state of, like, I hate my job, I hate my life, like, yeah?

I mean, there's no formula for it.

go to hang out at this hotel - (how did I know about this random place in the middle of nowhere, but that's the one I chose, it was in Lichtenstein) - to go on my honeymoon or whatever, gyeah, and it looked like the Best Western in Stanley, but, hey, this was before Expedia's sorta unwritten history of the world, and I'm, like, transitioning how I do my routine and my schedule's kinda all over the place, and I was like, "there's nobody here", it was empty - (the hotel hadn't hit the tipping point which allowed it to start getting the revenue to be able to hire people for it to be able to keep growing a community and reach toward the goal of reaching as many people as possible) - which was awesome because I did this crazy thing where I had one of the best continental breakfast ever with no humans running around - "get out of my way, I just want my biscuits and gravy now" - because I normally just don't know how long breakfast is gonna take cause normally in the morning, I'm, like, recycling nutrients and stem cells and whatever the theory is into my mug and then, like, drinking in my intentions because if you continue on that path you eventually get there, you know, and it got me thinking, like, you look at the label on the jar, one that's heavily dude-oriented, and you're like "dude is so stressed out because they won't stop thinking about this and this and this..." - (I mean it's something that a lotta dudes were still afraid to do then) - and that's ok if they wanted to think that there's nothing more available to them, it's just that that kind of mindset was not ready to... I mean you still notice it's there, it's kind of failed... that feels mean because it can be very well done, but that kind of unfortunate is just not serving or doing it justice or expanding societal horizons in this beautiful realm, (I'm just so immersed in this beautiful world now, but those were the types of ideas that were not yet mainstream), and then she was just like "I'm putting you on the schedule, like, you're going to perform in the hotel to-night", and I'm like "wait wait wait, OMG, this is the easiest thing ever!" So, stupidly I was, like, I just said I would do it.
